Coaching-Workshop, 9 April 2018:

Master’s degree – What’s next?
Steps in Academia and Beyond

This workshop addresses female students at the end of their master’s program.

Once you complete your master’s degree you have a number of opportunities: You can stay on the academic path, start a doctoral project and maybe even head for a career in research and teaching. You might want to look for a change – go into the business world, start your own entrepreneurial project or work for an NGO or a non-profit-organization. Sometimes it can be hard to figure out where you actually want to go.

Goals of the Workshop
The workshop helps you develop your individual career goals beyond your master’s program:

- What are your competencies? What is it that you are good at?
  - Which job opportunities do these skills hold for you?
- What do you want from a job? What kind of work environment do you prefer?
- How do your professional and personal visions align?

The personal reflection is complemented with insights into the doctoral project as a potential step for your academic and professional career. You will get information what to expect from a career in academia in order to come to a decision what is the right path for you.

Coach
Prof. Dr. Martin Zierold is Professor of Arts Management and Cultural Studies at the Institut für Kultur- und Medienmanagement at Hochschule für Musik und Theater Hamburg. Additionally, he is specialized on coaching scientists and early career researchers.

Information and Application
Monday, 9 April 2018: 9 a.m. – 5 p.m.
You will receive further information (e.g. location) via e-mail after your successful application.
Please submit your informal application by 30 March 2018 with your CV and if available an exposé of your doctoral project (max. two pages). Please note, the number of participants is limited, therefore your application is binding. There is a fee of EUR 20.
